JAPAN IS UNRUFFLED BY CALIFORNIANS HONOLULU HONORS GREAT PATRIOT

Liberator's Praises Chanted By Children

On one side the martial hosts—stalwart, grim, bronzed, armed with all the modern instruments of death and destruction—cavalry and infantry dressed in the service uniform that is known and respected the world over as the uniform of the best fighting men of any civilized country, standing rigidly at attention facing the flag that has so often led them to victory; on the other side, facing them, a host of school children, the girls clothed in pure white, the emblem of peace and good-will, the boys in their darker school-day suits—this was the unique gathering at the Gore near the palace, a gathering that could not be duplicated anywhere else in the world.

They were gathered there to do honor to the Great Liberator, Abraham Lincoln, the foremost President of the United States, who was born in a little log cabin one hundred years ago today.

Wherever the American flag flies the people assembled today to honor this man who holds a place in the hearts of the American Nation that can never belong to any other. But nowhere else, be it in the States or in the distant isles of the Far Seas, could be found such a cosmopolitan assemblage, nor a gathering so exuberant in its manifestations of patriotism. On the mainland the flag and all that it represents are institutions so old that the people show less enthusiasm over the Stars and Stripes and look upon the Constitution in a matter-of-fact way, even though their patriotism be no less genuine and deep-rooted than that of Hawaii.

But it is only a little more than a decade since the Red, White, and Blue—the Stars and Stripes—became the emblem of the freedom of Hawaii as well as of the States of the mainland, and people here are not unnaturally a little more reverent in their demeanor toward the flag, a little more effusive in their expressions of adoration of the greatest of all the Americans.

It was a picture that can never be reproduced in words any more than can the cold blacks and whites of the photograph give any idea of the real scene, the colors, the soft air, the

One Hundredth Anniversary of Abraham Lincoln's Birth is the Signal for Whole-Hearted Celebration—Banks and Business Houses Close Their Doors to Honor Nation's War-Time Chieftain

With one accord Honolulu's population turned out today to celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln. The unanimity with which folk joined in the celebration may have been equalled on some former occasion; it has never been surpassed.

'Twas Lincoln Day in thought, act, and deed, as well as in name. The name of the great martyr President was on every tongue and, with all the festive and exuberant spirit, there was an air of subdued solemnity about it all.

School children, to whom the history of the great American is but a pretty bit of history, joined with the grizzled veterans who fought under "Old Abe's" orders, in doing honor to a name revered by all loyal Americans. The day was one of spontaneous enthusiasm.

WEATHER IS IDEAL

During the night, and the early hours of the morning, rain fell in torrents, and it looked as though all of the plans for an open-air demonstration might go for naught. Shortly after sunrise a balmy breeze dispelled the clouds, and when the time rolled around for the procession to start, Old Sol was doing his best to sustain Honolulu's reputation for weather of the Garden-of-Eden variety.

Had the weather man laid out the day on lines specified by the committee in charge of the arrangements, he could not have made a better job of it. Not too warm to cause the marching soldiery discomfort, not too cool to discommodate the watching multitudes along the line of march, the day was little short of ideal.

And the spirit of the weather was the spirit in the hearts of the participants. "Peace, perfect peace," was the prevailing note on every hand.

BUSINESS HOUSES CLOSE

The suggestion that all places of business be closed in honor of Lincoln's birthday met with universal satisfaction, and after 10 o'clock there was scarcely a store in the downtown district open.

Even before the announcement was made that this was a legal holiday, the banking establishments had announced their intention of closing, and merchants quickly fell into line. Some did not open their stores at all, while others had the doors open until

MISSOURIAN COMES EAGER THROGS IN WITH LIVE STOCK STREET AND PARK

Was Nine Days And 20 Hours Coming From Seattle

Nine days and twenty hours from Seattle and experiencing moderate weather, with the exception of a few days, the steamship Missourian, of the American-Hawaiian line, Captain Lyons, arrived this morning and docked at the railroad wharf. She did not discharge her cargo at once, but the stevedores, who had assembled there, were instructed to return before 1 o'clock, when they commenced to unload 1500 tons of general cargo, brought by the freighter.

On board the Missourian is live stock, consisting of bulls and heifers. The animals, according to Dr. Norward, the Territorial veterinarian, are the best that have ever been imported here. The animals were picked up by E. W. Carter when he was last in the States. They will be shipped to the Parker ranch.

The Missourian, after loading here, will leave for Kahului, thence to Ele-

Record-Breaking Crowds
Watch Festive
Ceremonies

"Where do all the people come from?" was the question on everybody's tongue this morning while the Lincoln Day festivities were in progress. Along the entire line of march, while the parade was passing, the sidewalks were black with people, and on the down-town streets there was the usual amount of struggling for vantage points from which to view the procession.

As the parade passed up Fort street preparatory to turning into Hotel, not only was the curb line black with eager humanity, but there were struggling groups standing in store-fronts, trying, from the slightly higher elevation, to look over the heads of the persons on the sidewalk below.

Around the Governor's reviewing stand, humanity was packed like sardines.

NATION'S DEFENDERS PASS BY IN MARTIAL REVIEW

Garbed in their plain service uniforms, which tell of preparation for fighting rather than for mere martial display, the mounted and foot forces of the United States Army and the National Guard of Hawaii made a brave show as they passed through the streets this morning, parading in honor of the memory of him who was the commander-in-chief of all the Armies and the Navy of the Federal Government during the great civil conflict of '61-'65.

The procession was scheduled to start moving at 9 o'clock. Just as the minute hand of the clock reached the appointed hour, Major Dunning, in charge of the ceremonies, gave the signal to the troops assembled at the corner of Hotel street and Miller street, and the long line broke into motion.

A squad of mounted police rode ahead of the procession to keep the street clear, but there was little need for their services. Everyone was too much awed by the display of armed strength to care to get in the way of the moving column.

Major Dunning Ahead
The parade proper was headed by Major Dunning of the Twentieth Infantry and his personal staff. Mounted upon a spirited charger and clad in tropical service uniform of kahki, the Major looked the embodiment of the American soldier.

Next in line came the battalion of the Twentieth Infantry from Fort Shafter. The men were uniformed in kahki with the service cap and the new-model, canvas puttee leggings, and they looked extremely business-like. The small boys, trotting along the sidewalk, looked on in awestricken silence as the stalwart soldiery passed.

At the corner of Hotel and Bishop streets, where the column turned makai, the crowd massed and there were remarks of admiration as the battalion, marching in column of squads, changed front and continued on its way in "column of companies" formation.

There was not a break in step as the men rounded the corner and every brown Springfield was parallel with that on either side.

Following the infantry came the marine battalion, commanded by Major Long. Real horse marines, not the horse marines of story, were in line. Not only was the commanding officer mounted, but the members of his staff as well, and the old joke of the sailor on horseback was given a severe setback by the way in which the officers handled their mounts.

Marines Look Martial
The four companies of the marine battalion were uniformed in kahki with campaign hat instead of service cap. With steps as regular as clock beats—thirty inches in length and 120 to the minute—the sea-soldiers passed, executing "squads right" at the Bishop street corner in perfect unison.

In back of the marines came the National Guard, Colonel Ziegler in command. There were two full battalions in line, the second division of the troops being commanded by Lieutenant Colonel Coyne.

But with all the martial display there was an unsatisfied expression on the faces of the youngsters, and many a glance was directed down the street. Just as the last National Guard company passed, a group of olive-drab clad horsemen rounded the corner. "The cavalry!" was the whispered announcement, and a minute later that veteran Indian fighter, Major Foster of the Fifth Cavalry, followed by his staff, rode into the line of vision. There was a flutter
